Computer Operators oversee the operation of computer hardware systems, ensuring that these machines are used as efficiently and securely as possible. Computer Operators may work with mainframes, minicomputers, or networks of personal computers. Computer Operators must anticipate problems and take preventive action, as well as solve problems that occur during operations.

Computer Programmers write, test, and maintain the detailed instructions, called programs, which computers follow to perform their functions. Programmers also conceive, design, and test logical structures for solving problems by computer. With the help of other computer specialists, Computer Programmers figure out which instructions to use to make computers do specific tasks.

Computer System Analysts solve computer problems and use computer technology to meet the needs of an organization. Computer System Analysts may design and develop new computer systems by choosing and configuring hardware and software. Computer System Analysts may also devise ways to apply existing systems' resources to additional tasks.
